Thatcher Rules No Concession On Coal Dispute

Mrs. Thatcher's defense of her Conservative government's posi-tion came at a time when the strike appeared to be moving into a climactic phase, and when the fate of possible new negotiations to end the bitter and frequently violent strike hung in the balance.

In a stormy debate in Parliament, Mrs. Thatcher said the final No Malice decision on whether to shut down coal pits that were "uneconomic, meaning that they could only produce coal at a big loss, "must rest with the management of the Na-tional Coal Board," the organization that runs Britain's nationalized coal mines.

tional secret aid to Nicaragua last October, until Feb. 28. Several lawmakers, including Senator David Durenberger, a Minnesota Repub-lican who is chairman of the Senate intelligence committee, have said the United States should fund the rebels openly.

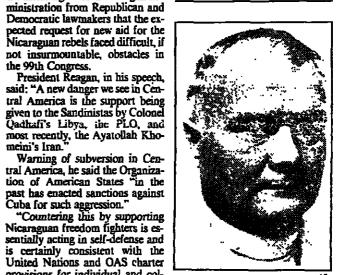

The administration has never officially acknowledged that it is financing a rebel force trying to overthrow a government with which Washington maintains diplomatic relations. The administration has argued that its efforts have been directed not at overthrowing the Sandinists but at preventing Nicaragua from exporting revolution to El Salvador and other Central American nations. In The Hague, the International Court of Justice said Thursday it would ignore the U.S. withdrawal from a suit filed by Nicaragua and will continue hearing Managua's complaints that the United States covertly supported the rebels. Taslim Elias, the presiding judge, said the court would give Nicaragua until April 30 to present its case. The United States has until May 31 to present its defense.

The United States, citing national security concerns, has an-nounced it will boycott court proceedings on the case. It has accused the Sandinists of "misusing the court for political purposes."

VIENNA - Walter Reder, a former SS major and the last Nazi war criminal held in Italy, flew to Austria on Thursday after being released from prison in the town of Gaeta. His sentence for war crimes, imposed by an Italian military tribunal, was due to end in July.

An Austrian Defense Ministry spokesman said that Defense Minister Friedhelm Frischenschlager met Mr. Reder, 69, an Austrian citizen, on arrival at a military airfield near Graz. The Austrian news agency, APA, said that Mr. Frischenschlager had accompanied Mr. Reder to Baden, a small spa town south of Vienna.

The news that Mr. Frischenschlager had met Mr. Reder became known as 200 Jewish leaders from 40 countries converged in Vienna to attend a three-day meeting of the Governing Board of the World Jewish Congress, United Press International reported.

[At a press conference, Mr. Frischenschlager said his presence in Graz was a matter of logistics and was not to be confused with an official reception. He said Foreign Minister Leopold Gratz informed him Wednesday of the expected arrival and requested that he take care of the transportation.]

Asked whether the Thatcher government was bostile to unions, Thomas King, the employment minister, said: "Certainly to the political ambitions of trade unions. Most union members don't want their unions to mess about in politics, anyway; they want better wages and con-

The unions "overreached themselves in 1979," he said, causing the downfall of the last Labor government, and since then have given their members "no sense of a policy being developed that could win the support of a majority of the public."

He said he would advocate a limited set of goals and campaign hard for them: greater public expenditure to create jobs, some program to respond to Mrs. Thatcher's popular policy of sell-ing public housing to occupants and a revitalization of the National Health Service.

He added that unions would have to work much harder to organize public-sector workers and do a much better job of keeping in touch with the political and economic views of their rankand-file members. By implication, he was urging unions to avoid involving themselves too deeply with noneconomic issues such as nuclear disarmament.

"The whole thing has gone wrong," he said, "You can't tell people what to think, and you can't expect people to join trade unions out of habit. They have no reason to join and stay active unless it is to their own advantage." Unions have hired poll-takers

U.S. to Raise Request For Israeli Military Aid To $1.9 Billion for '86

By John M. Goshko

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has resolved objections by the Office of Management and Budget to an increase in military aid for Israel and will ask Congress to provide about $1.9 billion in such aid next year, U.S. officials said Thursday.

The officials said that figure was approved by the White House after Secretary of State George P. Shultz reached agreement with David A. Stockman, director of the budget office, on a formula circumventing the office's desire to freeze Israeli military aid at the present level of $1.4 billion.

Israeli officials said Thursday that, in the aid negotiations in Washington last month, Israel submitted a document outlining possi-ble economic and military aid requirements totaling $12 billion in the next three years.

The officials stressed, however. that the portions of the document dealing with the years after 1986 did not constitute a formal request but were "preliminary long-range projections of anticipated future needs" and "almost surely will be subject to revision" depending on how well the Israeli government deals with its economic troubles.

U.S. and Israeli negotiators reached tentative agreement in late December on $1.9 billion for the 1986 fiscal year. The budget office then argued that giving such a siz-able increase to Israel, already the largest recipient of U.S. foreign aid, would run counter to the office's efforts to cut the U.S. deficit by freezing most of the budget for fis-

, The U.S. officials said the dispute was resolved when Mr. Shultz and Mr. Stockman agreed on a formula that would involve reshuffling certain components of the administration's overall foreign aid request and diverting some funds originally intended for Export-Import Bank credits to the Israeli aid package.

The officials said that these measures, coupled with the normal adjustments that Congress makes in transposing its "base line" budgetary figures from one fiscal year to the next, will provide enough money to cover the increase.

At the same time, the officials said, the budget office will be able

The U.S. response to the immediate formal request for economic aid was to promise a fiscal 1986 request to Congress of $1.2 billion, the amount Israel is getting this year. The administration deferred a decision on the request for $800 million because Mr. Shultz was dissatisfied with the pace of Israel's moves toward an economic stabilization program. U.S. officials say Mr. Shultz believes his strategy of "holding the Israelis' feet to the fire" will gradually force them to take the austerity measures the administration seeks. If they do, the officials added, the United States is prepared to ask Congress for all or most of the $800-million emergency request.

■ Inflation Controls Sought

Prime Minister Shimon Peres sought agreement Thursday with trade unions and industrialists on an eight-month extension of wage and price controls that would limit Israel's inflation to 5 percent a month, The Associated Press reported from Tel Aviv.

Mr. Peres and four member of his cabinet met with leaders of the Histadrut trade union federation and representatives of the private sector to work out details after the broad outlines of agreement were reportedly reached during a 15-hour session Wednesday.

"Our trade unions have been one of the driving forces in the creation of modern Sweden," he said. "Historically, they are certainly a be-nign force, and they are still seen as such by most people. They are not revolutionaries, and they are very Swedish in that they never shout. They want to keep what they have —jobs and benefits — and they are willing to yield on wages to do

Not everyone agrees with that view. Assar Lindbeck, an economist, says he sees the penetration of almost every Swedish institution by the unions, and now their entry into the ranks of industrial ownership, as a threat to the pluralism he thinks essential to liberty.

But one does not hear even from Mr. Lindbeck and his allies in Sweden, or for that matter anywhere else in Western Europe, the kind of outright hostility to unions that one regularly bears in Britain.

The shuttle, bound on the first completely classified mission in the history of U.S. manned space flight, lifted off its launchpad Thursday afternoon and flew over the Atlantic Ocean. The launch was delayed a day by freezing weather in Florida.

The satellite, sources report, is capable of tracking Soviet missile tests and eavesdropping on military and diplomatic communications in much of Europe, Asia and Africa. The exact launch time was kept secret until minutes before the liftoff. That was intended to hamper Soviet efforts to monitor the satellite after the astronauts have released it from the

Yugoslav Court Releases Dissident

BELGRADE (Reuters) - A Yugoslav court has freed a dissident intellectual and reduced conspiracy charges against three others in an unexpected move from the prosecution.

The public prosecutor, Danilo Nanovic, announced Wednesday that the state was withdrawing all charges against a translator, Pavluska Imsirovic, 36, one of six defendants, for lack of evidence. He said the conspiracy charges against Miodrag Milic, 55, a scriptwriter, Dragomir Olujic, 36, a technician; and Milan Nikolic, 37, a sociologist, would be reduced to that of a lesser charge of spreading propaganda hostile to jugoslavia. This carries a one-year minimum sentence on conviction instead of the five-year minimum for conspiracy.

Mr. Nanovic said the state was also ready to amend charges against Vladimir Mijanovic, 38, a sociologist, and Gordan Jovanovic, 24, a philosophy student, who were absent from court Wednesday. The trial was adjourned until Monday.

Result of Popieluszko Autopsy Given

TORUN, Poland (AP) — The pro-Solidarity priest whom three Polish secret police officers are charged with killing was beaten repeatedly on the head and arms by fists and a club and apparently died by choking on his blood, medical experts told a court Thursday.

The experts said they could not determine for certain whether the Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko was dead or "on the verge of dying" on Oct.
19 when he was thrown into a reservoir bound, gagged and with a noose

But they said that the beatings administered to the priest were so severe that his death was "already irrevocable" before he was dumped into the water. The head of the autopsy team, Professor Maria Byrdy said the cause of death was a combination of factors, such as the blows, gagging and the noose but that the primary cause was choking on his blood.

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The president of Paraguay and other Paraguayan officials promised two visiting members of Congress last week that the Asunción government would destroy 49,000 gallons (185,760 liters) of chemicals believed to have been intended for the manufacture of cocaine, according to U.S. officials.

Before the visit by the congressmen, the president of Paraguay, General Alfredo Stroessner, had refused requests from the U.S. ambassador for a meeting to discuss the chemicals, which were seized in October by Paraguayan customs officers. The congressmen are Peter H. Kostmayer, Democrat of Pennsylvania, and Robert G. Torricelli, Democrat of New Jersey, the U.S. officials said Tuesday.

That refusal and an investigation by American officials had caused the State Department to say it believed senior Paraguayan military officers might be involved in drug trafficking. The chemicals that were seized ether, acetone and hydrochloric acid — are used to convert coca leaves to cocaine. U.S. officials said that with 49,000 gallons, traffickers could make about eight tons of cocaine, or 10 percent of the U.S. supply for a

Gandhi Puts Conditions on Sikh Talks

NEW DELHI (AP) - Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi declared Thursday that he will not open talks with Sikh leaders on a resolution of the cross examination of Mr. Sharon's crisis in Punjab state unless they renounce terrorism and withdraw autonomy demands.

The autonomy demands are contained in a 1973 resolution passed by ... the militant Akali Dal party, which Mr. Gandhi and other government leaders have called "secessionist." Mr. Gandhi said that there was no point in discussing demands for a larger share of interstate river waters and merger of Chandigarh city with Punjab if the Sikh leaders insisted on a settlement on the basis of the 1973 resolution.

"There can be no complete agreement as long as Akali Dal is not willing to compromise on this issue," Mr. Gandhi said in Parliament. The leaders should also state that they stood by the constitution."

Reagan to Offer Post to Kirkpatrick

WASHINGTON (NYT) - President Ronald Reagan said Wednesday that he intended to offer Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. representative to the United Nations, a high-level job in the foreign policy field, but he did not specify the post.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, who has expressed a desire to leave the UN post and return to Washington, is scheduled to meet with Mr. Reagan next Wednesday at the White House to discuss her future in the administration. A White House official said the leading candidate to replace Mrs. Kirkpatrick at the UN was Vernon A. Walters, an ambassador at large and former deputy director of Central Intelligence.

Administration officials speculated that Mrs. Kirkpatrick would be offered the directorship of the Agency for International Development, and close friends of Mrs. Kirkpatrick raised the possibility that she might be offered the top post at the United States Information Agency. U.S Advisory Council Seeks Total Ban on Cigarette Ads

WASHINGTON — The federal National Advisory Council on Drug Abuse has called for legislation to prohibit all advertising and promotion of cigarettes in the United States.

The council said Wednesday in a letter to Margaret M. Heckler, the secretary of Health and Human Services, that smoking was "one of the most widely practiced and destructive forms of substance abuse in America today,

Cigarette makers spend $1.5 billion a year on advertising and promotion, the council estimated. That, it said, "attests to the virtual flood of cigarette advertising which now exists in our print media."

A law banning cigarette commercials on radio and television took effect Jan. 2, 1971. The council called for a ban on advertising in magazines and newspapers, on billboards and at concerts and sports events. It urged that eigerette companies be prohibited from sponsor ing concerts and sports events.

Lloyd Johnston, a council member, said, "Most smokers establish their addiction before the age of 18" and are "not of an age" to make a mature choice. Cigarette advertisers may say they do not aim at the adolescent market, he said, but "they are reaching that market."

William D. Toohey Jr., a spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, a trade association for cigarette manufacturers, said he had not heard of the recommendation, but he described it as "extremely ill-advised."

U.S. and European Freeze Is Circling Back to Siberia

Los Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — The cold wave that earlier this month struck Europe and has now paralyzed the East Coast of the United States has given scientists an insight into global weather patterns.

Jerome Namias, a scientist at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography in La Jolla, California, believes the storm began to gain speed over northern Europe several weeks ago before it began its assault on the Atlantic states. He thinks it will move slowly across the United States and over the Pacific, then end up in the Far East, not far from where it began, in the northern reaches of Siberia.

He said high atmospheric pressures in the northern European countries and Siberia pushed cold weather south. "encouraging storms to form in the Mediterranean and south-em Europe." That resulted in something called "blocking." Mr. Namias said. The term, he added, means the normal atmospheric flow from west to east is "blocked, for reasons not yet fully understood," and the westerly winds that normally would confine the cold to Europe do not form.

"When that happens, the cold moves westward very slowly," he said. When it reached the Atlantic coast of the United States a couple of weeks ago, it created high pressure areas over the Arctic and forced cold weather south.

Additional storms form along the forward ridge of the cold front, and "each storm drags more cold air down with it as it moves south." Thus, the weather system, while really moving east to west, has been dubbed the "Alberta Clipper" or the "Siberian Express" cause of the cold air it has brought from the north.

Dr. Roger Wakimoto, of the atmospheric sciences department at the University of California, Los Angeles, described the phenomena as "a chain reaction type of thing."

Mr. Wakimoto said the "blocking" effect has a pro-found effect on weather patterns, both when it forms and when it fails.

"I would be more interested in what causes it to break down," allowing storms to move into unexpected areas, he said. "If we could do that, the accuracy of our predictions would go much higher."

Mr. Spadolini expressed optimism for the success of the talks on medium-range missiles, strategic weapons and space arms.

The White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, said the Reagan administration had not had a re-sponse from Moscow on its suggestion that the new talks begin in Geneva in March.

China Steps Up Attacks Against Vietnamese, Cites 'Provocations'

By John F. Burns

BELIING - China has announced that its forces counterattacked against Vietnam in recent days after weeks of "provocations" along the border.

The Foreign Ministry statement Wednesday gave no indication of the scope of the military actions, nor any other details.

But officials said the military actions were continuing and were on a scale greater than usual in the sporadic fighting that has gone on

Moreover, the diplomats said, it was far from clear that Chinese prospects in a new war would be any better than in 1979, when Beijing incurred heavy losses against stiff Vietnamese defenses.

Nonetheless, there were signs that tensions in the region had increased to a dangerous degree be-cause of recent Vietnamese attacks Cambodia, which has been occupied by Vietnam since 1978. Among other things, the attacks have sharpened longstanding ani-mosities between China and the Soviet Union, Vietnam's ally.

Thio became a flashpoint over independence after the Kanak front boycotted territorial elections Nov. 18 and demanded immediate independence.

But independence is apparently strongly opposed by most of the Europeans, Polynesians and Asians who make up 57 percent of New Caledonia's 145,000 people. The Kanak front claims it represents nearly all of the native Kanaks, who make up the rest of the population.

The independence fighters say the damage was done by rightist Europeans trying to discredit them. The front says it will not allow the mine to reopen until the nickel company recognizes the natives' sovereignty and the French release political prisoners seized after the siege ended.

Jacque Loquet, one of the few European members of the Kanak front, says the French forces have been going after Kanaks since the siege ended. More than 50 people have been arrested and the French are trying to break the front, he said.

Mr. Loquet, who says he favors a peaceful political path to independence, says many European residents could not accept the humiliation of seeing their town seized so easily by the Kanaks. Many are unlikely to return, he

by Anna Kisselgoff

EW YORK — In case you don't know the story of "Romeo and Juliet," the Joffrey Ballet and American Ballet Theater have now come to the rescue. Within a month of each other, at Kennedy Center in Washington, the two troupes presented U. S. company premieres of two European ballets based on Sergei Prokofiev's celebrated score. in A my come

As odd as this overlap of two major, expensive productions may seem, the same coincidence offers a revealing commentary upon the state of both European and American ballet. The Joffrey is presenting John Cranko's version created for his Stuttgart Ballet, originally danced in the United States by the West German company in 1969. ABT is presenting Sir Kenneth MacMillan's 1965 version, which had its U.S. premiere in the same year with Britain's Royal Ballet.

What does this double staging mean? Some would reply that it suggests a bankruptcy of imagination: Neither American company can think of anything else — nor can either one provide a new choreographer to create as good a treatment of Shakespeare's play as two British choreographers did within three years of one another.

Yet this overlap is also a reflection upon the Royal and the Smttgart. It would have been inconceivable 15 years ago for the Royal to permit one of its signature pieces to be performed by another company in New York. The MacMillan "Romeo" showed the Royal's ensemble playing at its finest and served as a consistent vehicle for established stars — Margot Fonteyn and Rudolf Nureyev—and new ones, including the young dancers for whom it was created, Lynn Seymour and Christopher Gable. Cranko's version contributed greatly to the Stuttgart's initial reputation.

Nowadays, the Royal doesn't visit New York and the Stuttgart not at all. Cranko died in 1973 and MacMillan will divide his time between the Royal and Ballet Theater, for which he has recently become "artistic associate. Moreover, the two European companies have moved into different phases, even different styles. To say the Royal was identified with "Romeo and Juliet" at one time would not be wrong. Yet even good ballets can die if they are not performed often, and these are not.

And so we now have a relatively new concept at work: Better a reproduction than no production. Unlike the 19th-century classics, these two ballets are not open to major changes (there would be no point in doing them otherwise) and are restaged with their production values and choreographic text intact. MacMillan personally supervised his ballet's staging for ABT and Georgette Tsingnirides did the same for Joffrey's "Romeo and Juliet." The result in each case is a copy of the original, not a new look at it.

There is a certain validity to this approach. If successful, the Joffrey and Ballet Theater will restore to American audiences two popular full-evening narrative ballets, and each has chosen the version most natural to it. The Joffrey has previously staged other Cranko ballets, and MacMillan, whose earliest ballets in the 1950s were created under the aegis of Ballet Theater, has had several works - in its repertory.

Each company faces a dilemma. A mere copy is a fossilized work of art. To change too much is to meddle with a familiar ballet. Each company now needs to make the "Romeo" it has chosen distinctly its own. The dancers need to give it their own interpretation, a Joffrey or Ballet Theater stamp upon the set spectacular values and theatricality that moved the companies to stage the ballet in the first place.

> Bolshoi Ballet production, which was based on Lavrovsky's 1946 collaboration with Prokoliev in 1940 for the original version at the Kirov Ballet. Prokofiev's programmatic score dictated a similarity of structure in the later two versions. In a few instances, MacMillan has been inspired by Cranko, whose three gypsies, for instance, become three hardworking harlots in MacMillan's staging. And yet each choreographer has also created different images some in minor scenes, that make for significant differences in the dramatic action. MacMillan has Paris attempt to force himself upon Juliet in the last act. She dances obediently. Then, as the choreography makes clear if rightly danced, she resists him as if he were assaulting her.

Cranko has no such detailed episode and he does not concentrate on intimate closeups as MacMillan does. On the other hand, he has val, with obvious folk rituals. And this communal revelry contrasts with the private tragedy about to take place. MacMillan, instead, has a wedding party, to associate with Romeo's dream of marrying Juliet. Romeo stabs himself in Cranko's version, but swallows a potion in MacMillan's.

The major difference is one of overall emphasis. Cranko's ballet depends upon an ensemble picture while MacMillan's offers a dramatic focus on the principals. Cranko's stage values are highly pictorial. There is a constant play upon formal groupings and design to communicate emotion. The symmetry behind Shakespeare's play is repeatedly shattered by Cranko's asymmetry when a crisis comes to a climar. A strong Romeo and Juliet are of great help here, but they are less crucial than in the MacMillan staging. In line with the interest in psychological themes he has shown elsewhere, MacMillan focuses on the lovers. There are four duets for them, each beginning with a "B" — ballroom, balcony, bedroom, bier. There is also more classical dancing in the MacMillan version, and it might seem more difficult. Yet Cranko's Soviet-style duets are also very technical and, because the Joffrey dances better than the Stuttgart, the virtuosity of the choreography is now more apparent.

Cranko's is the better ballet — faster paced, balancing the tension between individuals and the feuding clans. Cranko's designer, Jürgen

Rose, offers a more colorful Verona than Nicholas Georgeadis's Renaissance grandeur for MacMillan. MacMillan's version is more real, and it needs the reality o dancers who stand out from the ensemble. In recent years, Ballet Theater has pursued a no-star policy, presenting more of an ensemble image. Such leveling should not preclude star-quality performance, but it has not trained dancers, inexperienced in dramatic roles, to stand out in relief.

Finally, it is the company spirit that makes the difference. For MacMillan's "Romeo," the ensemble was a frame. For Cranko's, it was a tapestry into which the lovers' story was interwoven. The distinctions between the two versions can serve to justify two American productions of "Romeo and Juliet" —to offer not a choice but double pleasure.

by Donal Henahan

TEW YORK - The most common line that occurs in letters of objection received by music critics, according to a small, privately financed poll, is this one: "I really can't believe we heard the same concert."

It is such a stock response that it tends to dull whatever sharp points the complainant may have tried to make. That is because the trouble with most chiches is not that they are false but that they simply are too old and tired to sing anymore — too true to be good. Nevertheless, the critic who gives the mat-ter any thought will readily admit, cliche or no cliche, that he does not hear the same concert as his readers. It should be obvious that no two members of any andience hear exactly the same musical performance. No two of us possess exactly the same degree of aural acuity or pitch perception. Our musical background and training vary. No two listeners have exactly the same temperament, life experiences, social standing and cultural advantages. You are, let us suppose, an only child; I happen to be the 17th in a brood of 35. I am tall, handsome and impossibly rich; you are rather plain. You are a sensitive flower. rather plain, You are a sensitive flower; I am a clothopping boor. I came to the concert hungry, while you dined downtown on Tex-Mex, of which you begin to be reminded in the middle of the slow movement. Or, in each case, the other way around. In sum, though the sounds transmitted by the instruments, human or mechanical, go out on specific and identifiable wavelengths, each of us picks them up with a slightly different intenna that adds its own interesting static.

As if the foregoing litany of traisms were not enough, consider the unavoidable probiem of acoustics. Music as an art does not come to life until someone or something disturbs the air in odd ways that we recoginize as pleasurable or otherwise interesting sound. Just how interesting that sound turns out to be depends largely on accossics, whose effects may change in significance from performance to performance and from performer to performer. Although the basic character of any hall does not change much from performance to performance, the acoustical equation varies drastically for an orchestra playing a Mahler symphony, for a soprano singing Schubert heder or for a string quartet playing Webern's Opus 5.

That is why critics regularly find it necessary to take the acoustical character of a hall into consideration when reviewing performancos. It can never be a dead issue, dismssed once and buried forever. Whatever the venue, it remains one of the factors sometimes the overriding factor - that any musician must deal with, night in and night out. In fairness to the artist, then, it is often not only proper but necessary to point out how the ambience of a hall may have affected the performance, for good or evil.

Let us say, for instance, that I go to Bayreuth and hear a baritone whom I know from other experience to have a voice of middling size. I am thrilled to discover that the tone has become not only heroically large but remarkably rich and expressive. He has blossomed from a timid mumbler into Wotan. I am forced to suspect that the smallness of the Bayrenth theater and its famously resonant acoustics have had something to do with this apparent miracle. The artist himself may even sing better and more confidently, knowing he need not shout to be heard.

Or, say, I hear the same pianist play a Brahms concerto in New York's Carnegie Hall and a Mozart concerto in Avery Fisher Hall The Brahms should sound better in Carnegie, a hall that is more attuned to the romantic repertory, while the Mozart may come off very well in the drier ambiance of Avery Fisher. But nothing in art is that simple. What also must come into play are impumerable factors such as the size of the audience (more bodies soak up more sound), the piano chosen by the soloist (different pieces demand different keyboard actions. different voicing adjustments and so on) and his tone-producing methods. Nor can we overlook the volatile question of the stylistic conceptions and musicianship of both pianist and conductor.

Rather often, to be sure, the quality of a performance overshadows acoustical questions and every other question as well. I may prefer certain music in an intimate place seating a couple of hundred devotees, but if a Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau decides to sing Winterreise" in Carnegie Hall, I probably will be there, making whatever allowances are necessary. In the same way, I might prefer to hear the Tokyo String Quartet in my parlor rather than in Avery Fisher Hall's expanses, but sometimes we have to take what we can get where we can get it. A critic must reserve the right and duty, however, to mention the acoustical problems inherent in such mismatches of hall and artist where they seriously affect the musical outcome.

People with particularly keen ears would like us to believe that they sometimes can detect acoustical differences simply by moving into an adjoining seat. It is not necessarily to believe them to recognize that significant changes do occur from area to area. In both Avery Fisher Hall and Carnegie Hall, for instance, I have often been impressed by hearing orchestral tone increase in roundness and musical fidelity when I moved to a rear location from my usual seat in the center of the hall. The move brings a slight loss in brightness and presence but a compensatory gain in focus, perhaps because of the proximity of back and side walls. Similarly, the standing-room on Carnegie's main floor offers strikingly rich sound, although it is under an overhang that might logically be sup-posed to dull the tone.

O not take from this that the best seats in any house are always at the rear or under a balcony. I remember what a shock I had one night in the old Met when I moved after intermission from a side seat, under a balcony, to a higher-rent district in the center. The voices blossomed and the orchestra sounded like an orchestra, not like an ensemble trapped in a sewer. The old Met, in fact, was famously eccentric in its acoustics, with more variety of tone and volume from place to place than in any hall I have known. There was even an aconstically charmed spot on the stage from where, according to legend, voices projected with spe-cial power, amplified by some structural accident or other. Artists were said to jostle each other for the favored spot, like racehorses fighting for position in the home stretch, but I must confess I never witnessed that scene and find it hard to conceive of such unseemly behavior by opera singers. So, I am sorry to belabor the point, sir or madam, but you are right: you and I do not, cannot, hear the same concert or opera or recital. Not ever. If nothing else, it is important to remember that each of us occupies a different space in the hall, one body to a sear. And even your seat selection can make a significant difference. For some reason that probably could be explained by a social theoretician such as Theodor Adorno or Walter Benjamin, the less you are able to spend for a seat in most halls, the better you will hear the music. As a rule, sound improves as you go up into the balcony, any balcony. Generations of poor but discerning students have known that. As music listeners grow older, more conscious of status and less keen of ear, their need to sit closer to the performers becomes greater. So, demographically speaking, does their ability to pay for the supposedly choice front seats. It's almost algebraically neat, isn't it? Unfortunately, at the moment I can't think of anything else that is uncomplicated about the question of why people hear different concerts in the same hall on the same night. Sorry.

The Puttnam Enigma

ARIS — "Chariots of Fire" won four Academy Awards in 1982 and so far has returned $100 million on its $6-million cost. From a wise gny, its producer, David Puttnam, has become a sage with a CBE from the queen and an honorary degree from Bristol University, where he is giving a course this year on the role of the film producer. This month he is in Los Angeles, presenting detailed case studies of four of his films.

Puttnam followed "Chariots of Fire" with an impeccable small film, "Local Hero." and this winter released "The Killing Fields," a courageous epic about Cambodia under the heel of the Khmer Rouge. It has been said that Puttnam inspired the renaissance of the British film industry, but aside from the emergence of one major production company, Goldcrest (of which he is a board member), he is not at all certain that any rebirth has occurred.

MARY BLUME

Puttnam should be in the cathird seat but sees himself on a helter-skelter instead. He is restless, dissatisfied, and says that if the financial situation has improved, the state of British filmmaking — despite such huge successes as "Chariots" and Richard Attenborough's "Gandhi" — has not.

"The jury's out and the jury's liable to remain out for another two years. I just think that we don't have the entrepreneurial zeal and ability that the Americans have, to learn by our mistakes quickly. We're slow to capitalize on our successes and we're slow to learn from our mistakes in films." Putmam - who has worked in advertising, documentaries and television - was in Paris to meet with the French minister of culture and a group of directors and producers to discuss the future of European cinema. At the last moment, the directors refused to sit down with the producers and the meeting fell apart.

"The Director's Guild in Great Britain had a meeting the other day about organiza-tional things and apparently it was a shambles," Puttnam says equably. "One of the people said 'How can we straighten this out?" and someone else said 'We need a producer.' That might either be a prologue or an epitaph for today's meeting. What they need is a

The producer, says Puttnam, is responsible for all the things the camera cannot see. One of the few who can be referred to by the apparently contradictory words creative producer, he has little patience with schisms between art and money. Such divisive think-ing, he says, is holding back the entire British film industry. He wants film to be considered in its broadest context, as part of what he calls the entire media spectrum. "One thing that irritates me is the poverty of the debate within which film gets discussed. Film is only one element in the media mix but you get no sense of people backing off and seeing how film and television, for example, are interlinked. And you cannot discuss television without discussing the other media and technologies."

Without serious debate and study, Puttnam claims that vested interests ("the old men in gray suits") and amateurs ("the eternal undergraduates") will retain the status quo. To dramatize his view, he has let it be known that he is thinking of abandoning film and returning to advertising, taking a job with Saatchi and Saatchi, Britain's most visible agency. He says he will make his decision by the end of February.

When you consider the long-term role of film and television, one of the big players in all this, it seems to me, will be advertising. It would seem to me a good idea to inject a bit of philosophy and long-term thinking into that equation.

"Advertising is one of the major levers of the economy. And it's been a totally quies-cent non-lever, if you like. It would be good to know that there is some thinking there that wasn't just costed-out thinking. There's a fantastic quality of research available within the agencies, they could really be key players in all of this. They could be malign and they could be benign."

UTTNAM is voluble and thoughtful, ambitious and visionary, good at reading the bottom line and at imagining the whole. When he left school abrupt-ly at 16, his teacher scrawled at the bottom of his report, "This boy is a total enigma." His company is called Enigma Productions. He is a money man given to moral distinctions between what he calls the malign and the benign and he uses the word expiation quite a lot. He is a hard-nosed entrepreneur and he also has a rousingly romantic view of cinema that goes back to the films that he saw in north London, where he was born in 1941.

David Puttnam.

"I fell in love with cinema watching 'Pinocchio.' If you cut out all the 'Pinocchios,' where do you develop an affection for the cinema? We don't build audiences any more. When kids go to the cinema in America today, they're seeing a concrete product that has no growth in it. If you love Eddie Murphy films you're not going to move into Martin Scorsese, you're going to remain an Eddie Murphy fan, while before you could move from Disney to musicals to Kazan, and it was a very gentle slope.

"My whole ethical basis of my life and certainly my mental awakening was not at school, it was the American film of the 1950s - Kazan and 'On the Waterfront,' Zinnemann, and to a degree Stanley Kramer. I was sitting there like blotting paper. My vision, rightly or wrongly, was of a society that was fair-minded, where winners emerged, and evil was overcome."

Puttnam has a Norman Rockwell print in his office at home. Whether the image it gives of the United States is true or false is irrelevant to him: It is the image he grew up

He deplores the violence of Brian de Palma's films and thinks there is a direct relation between violence in film and violence in life. "Every time I open my mouth on the subject, I feel as if I'm tacitly advocating censorship and tacitly advocating a kind of propaganda cinema. I'm not, I'm suggesting that there be responsible filmmaking. I do think filmmaking is incredibly important."

Yes, but Puttnam did produce "Bugsy Malone," a gangster comedy played by chil-dren, and "Midnight Express," one of the most violent films ever made. "Bugsy Malone," he says, was simply the only way he and his best friend, Alan Parker, who was then a director of TV commercials, could break into films.

"We thought we'd use the same expertise we'd developed in advertising and come up with a product," he says.

"Bugsy Malone" was a product that sold well enough to enable Puttnam to launch another TV director, Ridley Scott, with "The Duellists," a classy adaptation of a Conrad

By then Puttnam was ready to move into the big time, and he and Parker made "Midnight Express," with a budget three times that of "Buggy Malone." "'Midnight Express' was not an example of responsibility," Puttnam admits. "It is a malign film. But you must understand, and I feel strongly about this, we were nowhere in Britain. I mean, to say you were a filmmaker in Britain in 1975 was a joke. Ten years later, people forget that. You either got a small grant from the British Film Institute to make an experimental film or you didn't exist outside of the television and commercial business?

"So the first thing was 'Bugsy,' just to get a film made. Then we did 'The Duellists,' which was terribly well received but seen as an art film. Our next determination was to show we're just as good filmmakers as the Americans. We wanted material that from American standards was commercial. We wanted to dazzle them commercially.

" Midnight Express' is certainly a malign film, but it's a film that turned me into a mainstream film producer. And it gave me a negotiating position. Without it I would never have had the chance to make 'Chariots of

"Chariots," with its boyish idealism, was, says Puttnam, a sort of expiation for "Mid-night Express." "I wanted to give the audience the sort of feeling I had at my best when I walked out of the cinema."

The Killing Fields" had a $12.5-million budget and is Puttnam's homage to the semi-documentary film, "The Battle of Algiers." It was also an attempt to expiate his mis-placed enthusiasm when the Khmer Rouge took over Cambodia.

GAIN he used an untried director, Roland Joffé, who came through with flying colors. The story centers on the friendship of a New York Times reporter, Sydney H. Schanberg, and his Cambodian interpreter, Dith Pran, who is cruelly impris-oned by the Khmer Rouge. At the end, the two men are reunited to the strains of John Lennon's "Imagine."

The use of "Imagine" caused some surprise and a lot of heavy explanation. The reason was benign manipulation.

"If 'Killing Fields' breaks even or makes a profit, I know there are 20 pieces of material lying around so far collecting dust that will become makable for other people. You know this is a fashion business," Puttnam says. "I knew what Roland and I were doing when we put 'Imagine' at the end of the film and I knew without doubt that out of the woodwork and slam us for it.

"I had in mind an audience commensurate with the cost of the film. And I knew we had to broaden that audience out to an audience where the tears had to be won a little more cheaply than if it had been a smaller picture. We couldn't afford to be austere, we've got to get an audience in to see that picture. It cannot afford to appeal to a high-minded audience in New York, San Francisco, Chicago and Boston. Not only does the film fail, but by definition the type of film fails."

Puttnam's next film starts shooting in Colombia and Argentina in April and with a $19-million budget is his costlicat so far. It may also be his most controversial. Called "The Mission," it is set in 1750 and deals with Jesuits who, having converted some Guarani Indians, are ordered by Rome to desert them, Rome having sanctioned Portuguese slaving claims to the territory. The Jesuits refuse to abandon their charges and they and the Indians are wiped out. Roland Joffé will direct and Robert Bolt, a scenarist of epics, has written the script.

Just now, as Putmam prepares the new film and makes his decision about returning to advertising - a decision that seems more a metaphor than a likelihood - he is also deeply engaged in the government-spon-sored British Film Year, which starts in April.

There will be lots of activities, there are lots of ideas. Puttnam is in the thick of it all. "It's aimed at this incredible untapped depth of affection for the cinema, untapped because we haven't really done the job which was done for us, audience building," he says. When he was a kid there were five movie houses within walking distance of his house. When one of them was torn down recently, a workman on the site gave him two signs that might sum up his ambivalence to British film right now. One says "Exit"; the other, "Opening Monday and All Next Week."

History in a Pull-Top Can

by Michael Kernan

ASHINGTON - I have a press release here that says Jan. 24 was the 50th anniversary of the beer Thanks a lot.

My father was born before airplanes or IV or even radio, and I used to think, My God, that is old. That is an old guy.

Now I see I was born before the beer can.

I thought beer cans went back to when guys in bowler hats brought their suds home from the saloon in little tin buckets. In fact, that was how it got the name suds: It looked just like a bucket of extremely soapy water. I thought they just welded a top on the bucket so they could take it in to watch John L. Sullivan fight Gentleman Jim Corbett, and that was the first beer can.

Not at all, according to the Can Manufacturers Institute.

On Jan. 24, 1935, the Kreuger Brewing Co. sold the first canned beer to the parched people of Richmond, Virginia.

Since that historic day, 610 billion beer cans have been produced, though through the years the changes, the institute avers, have been enormous. Quart cans started in 1937, 16-ouncers in 1954. Ring-pulls came in 1962 (Iron City Beer, Pittsburgh), and the sleek, modern, conservation-wise, non-detachable (except when it breaks off in your hand) pull-top was introduced in 1975. Those are the institute's milestones. They are not mine. The first beer can I personally handled was painted olive drab because it was made for the troops in World War II. From Pearl Harbor on, all two billion cans produced during the war went to servicemen abroad, and people were worried that The Enemy might sight a gun on the glint off a can of

A friend of mine's big brother brought one back from Tarawa. We could touch it but not open it. The theory was it would be valuable ROUND 1945 my cousin, John Rudd A began carrying a church key on his belt. You didn't want to brush past him too closely because he wore the sharp end sticking out like a torn car fender.

The first time I managed to crush a beer can with one hand was at a party on Lake Moraine in August 1947. Cans were a lot stronger then. Aluminum didn't come in until 58.
On Christmas Eve 1959, assembling a toy garage, I looked at the unpainted underside and discovered it was made from Miller High Life cans. All the way from Japan.

For the institute, the big news of 1970 was the founding of the Beer Can Collectors of America. For me it was the story that divers on an ocean-bed archaeological dig off Mexico came up with several rusty ring-pulls, causing a wave of editorials about how we were littering the planet with the things. Little girls made them into necklaces, too, as I recall.

Today the beer can is part of the basic costume of country-and-western macho. Right up there with the dangling cigarette. A cowboy can get as much emotion out of a beer can in the fist as John Garfield ever got out of a cigarette. You can carry one in the breast pocket of your denim jacket if you don't mind the cold.

In every sense of the word, the beer can is part of the landscape. And after only 50

COUPLE driving with the kids to Disney World without having packed a few of their best-loved toys may be in worse trouble than Challenger or Discovery with a malfunctioning antenna. The astronauts, after all, have ground support from supercomputers and battalions of technicians. But parents on the throughway have no one to turn to when their offspring whine "It's boring!" and start fighting with each other.

List-making is a way to deal with forgetting anything before going on a trip, whether in a starship or in the family sedan. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has developed intricate countdown procedures before launchings, and cancels the entire project if something goes wrong. Methodical people, too, draw up their own checklists if they plan to spend a weekend in Niagara Falls or set out to scale a Himalayan

Some executives of multinational corporations and other frequent travelers carry personalized countdown catalogs in their brief-cases. ("Cancel lunch and dinner dates," Have secretary make hotel reservations, "Get new batteries for portable computer.") Guidebooks, almanacs and packets for airline tickets have long offered hints for would-be travelers on how to get ready.

But the most elaborate litany of suggestions I have ever seen was detailed on a yellow folder that I found recently in a bag from the Motzko Bookstore in Salzburg, where I had bought some Mozart literature. The four-page folder, published by the bookstore, enumerated 194 steps that the compleat journeyer should take before actually leaving. NASA couldn't do better.

The folder is entitled "Vacation Checklist for Unencumbered Holidays." A drawing shows a man with a potato nose and a chin like a cleaver, surely a landlubber despite his sailor's cap, in repose under an umbrella in a rowboat, the oars drawn in. smoking a pipe and reading a book. He will need plenty of rest after completing the 194 countdown steps, and should try not to think of what is to be done on returning home.

The checklist doesn't even mention the earliest stage, when the man now lazing in the boat said at some point, "Let's go to Lake Garda!" He must have asked the boss to set vacation dates and visited a travel bureau to arrange for bookings. Could he have done that without a preliminary list of his own making?

The yellow timetable starts with the heading "Four to Six Weeks Earlier." Step No. 1 asks: "Is your passport or ID still valid?" Some people who want to go abroad will realize they don't even have an expired passport. They ought to lose not a minute. According to Step No. 4, the period four to six weeks prior to departure is also a good time to visit the family physician and the dentist. Perhaps in Salzburg. In other parts of the world, would-be travelers may be told that the doctor and dentist are themselves on vacation, and they will be fortunate if they get an appointment for some day after their

Meanwhile, the holiday candidates can get shots to immunize them against diseases lurking in foreign ports. Cholera? Bubonic plague? Sleeping sickness? Painstaking re-search will be necessary; inquiries at the Geneva headquarters of the World Health Organization may be in order. Those four to six weeks will be quite a busy time in other respects. Step No. 10 warns: "Take Security Measures." Would-be travelers are ordered to make sure all locks in their home are still working as they should and that windows and grates won't budge. Then, an inventory of all valuables and appliances must be drawn up, "wherever possi-ble with serial numbers." It may be a good idea to take pictures of all those possessions because photos will be helpful "to identify them and press insurance claims" if. despite all precautions, they are stolen.

HREE to one weeks before departure life is getting really hectic. The house-holders who have just snapped pictures of their jewelry, washing machine and television set are busy assembling their travel pharmacy. It seems they shouldn't by any means leave without remedies for circulatory disturbances and the vagaries of the diges-tive system together with an arsenal of other pills, creams and sprays, including a "light sleeping drug and tranquilizer."

Then there are bills to settle: Rent, insurance, installment payments, utilities, taxes. Foreign currency has to be bought. Adapter plugs for hair driers and irons are needed because those foreigners perversely use voltages and connections different from those at

To travel by car, you have to go through 36 extra steps. Among other things, you ought to put rough gloves, a blanket and an old coat into the luggage compartment in case of a flat. You might also find yourself in an accident: Take a chalk crayon to mark the pavement and a tape measure to determine

If you obey all the injunctions on the vellow list, you won't have much time to do your regular job: You must also familiarize yourself with customs and currency regulations in the countries you plan to visit, find out whether gasoline or foodstuffs are scarce and bone up on their traffic codes. You will feed your bank account and make sure you can request money transfers by telephone or telegram (ever heard of credit cards?).

You will also have to call on relatives and neighbors, providing them with your vacation address and phone number, the coordi-nates of foreseeable intermediate stops and the make and license plate number of your car "in case you are urgently needed at home." Such faintly ominous visits will offer chances to place your pets and plants in temporary foster homes. You might also ask neighbors or relatives to empty your mailbox daily and adopt other ruses "to create the impression your home is inhabited."

You won't have a moment to see two days here.

 $x^{\infty} \mapsto x^{\infty} X_{x}^{0}$

You won't have a moment to spare the last () 111 two days before departure, what with all the chores that the checklist suggests. Buy snacks for the trip; eat up all the items in your refrigerator so that it can be defrosted and the door left open; make an "ultimate inspection of the car, including the spare wheel"; get around to packing. Don't forget cuff links, an alarm clock, a robe, shoeshine equipment, hangers, matches, binoculars and inflatable mattress, a bellows to inflate the mattress and other paraphernalia.

With a second set of car keys and extra cash in a secret bag strapped to the chest under the shirt, the traveler is finally ready. All appliances and master switches turned off, windows hermetically closed.

Swallow a pill to protect against travel sickness and make a couple of quick phone calls (Step No. 194) to inquire about the traffic and the weather. Off you go. Unless. perchance, you are so exhausted by all the preparations and so drowsy thanks to the pill that you decide you ought to have a nap right away, and check into the nearest motel.

LFRED SLOAN of General Motors once said: "I know that at least half of my advertising money is being wasted. My problem is - I do not know which half."

A similar dictum might apply to the mon-cy that British companies spend on business

According to the property of t to manage this expenditure, and in some cases they cannot even identify how the money is being spent.

For example, less than a third of the com-panies interviewed use their corporate clout to negotiate the best deals with travel suppliers. Only 60 percent say they check all claims for expenses and only 28 percent itemize this expenditure into air travel, hotels, meals and so on. Moreover, cash advances to executives on the move amount to £780 million at any one time. This ties up vital cash resources and could be costing around £94 million a year in bank interest charges.

Although four out or tive companies that their top priority is to reduce the absolute level of overall business expenses, nearly their think that this will increase as a percentage of turnover in the next two to three years. This seems to indicate that most three years. This seems to measure companies believe they are presently getting value for money.

Travel policy is laid down at boardroom level in 84 percent of the companies interviewed and expense budgets in 58 percent.

However, once the budgets have been set, most of the companies leave individuals to make their own travel arrangements. The secretary, American Express notes with disapproval, is the single most important decision-maker in organizing business travel. (In only 6 percent of companies interviewed is a travel manager responsible for booking flights and botels.)

But there is nothing wrong with this. Presumably, executives and their secretaries know best what they want, and they need to have flexibility to make changes at the last minute. Tricia Dina, marketing manager, business travel, for the London-based travel agents Lunn Poly Ltd., says that Shell, one of her accounts, has recently dismantled its travel division.

What is important is that executives strength is should work with designated suppliers with whom the best corporate terms have been negotiated. But relatively few companies concentrate their travel budgets in this way. Only 42 percent have standing accounts with travel agents, according to the American percent of all business expenses. However, the £1.85 billion that this represents annually shows that even a 5-percent saving would: rules on complex itineraries," he says. give a £90-million clawback a year for corpolot less price-conscious," says Brian Donnelly, commercial director of Pickfords Travel Ltd. "Even companies that shop around for the lowest air fares fail to take advantage of the readily available corporate hotel rates." A survey made a year ago in Britain by Chief Executive magazine showed that half the companies it interviewed were not receivmg concessionary rates for hotel accommodation. In another sample of 300 business travelers, 73 percent reported that their companies had no policy on the use of specified hotels, while 54 percent claimed they could

Many companies get poor value, fail to use clout spend more or less what they liked on a room. It is rare for accounts to be settled by corporate charge card. Most executives in Britain pay by personal check or credit card and claim the money back on an expense

This practice has led to a proliferation of card-based incentive schemes by the major hotel groups, aimed at the individual rather than the company. Hilton has its Executive Business Service, Sheraton its Executive Travelers Club and Hyatt its Gold Passport. Typically, these offer the executive free accommodation ("a bargain weekend break for two") after the required number of "busi-ness nights" have been clocked up. Trusthouse Forte even offered a sports car to the executive who had the most stamps in his or her Premier Club "passport."
Although some incentive schemes offer discounts, many companies are losing out.

Ten percent off the published tariff doesn't begin to compare with the savings a company can make by making a direct deal with a hotel chain or travel agent.

Several travel agents have formed consortia for obtaining bulk discounts for hotel rooms. For example, Woodside, a Boston-based consortium of 65 travel agents, offers corporate clients up to 50 percent off regular room rates in 8,000 hotels throughout the world. The Woodside rate for the Intercontinental in New York is $105 for a single room. This compares with the corporate business rate of $140 and the normal published rate of $165.

A good travel agent can save a client money by hunting through the jungle of airline fare structures for the best deal. One way is to exploit promotional fare offers on some routes. Another is to include a more distant point on a ticket (to which you do not actually travel) to take advantage of variations in government-adjusted fares or soft currencies. TRAVEL

What's Doing in Honolulu

by Robert Trumbull

ONOLULU - What's the best time to visit Honolulu? Anytime. The Hawaiian climate is so consistently balmy that the native Polynesian language has no word for weather. Normal daytime highs range from 80 degrees Fahrenheit (27 degrees centigrade) between December and March to 87 degrees — on rare occasions a little higher - between July and September. The annual rainfall of only about 23 inches (59 centimeters) is also evenly distributed, though winter is a little wetter.

Could this climatic bliss, along with other attractions, make Hawaii too popular? Even-tually yes, says a demographer from the East-West Center, an international research and educational institution in Honolulu. The influx of tourists — more than 4.7 million last year - could, if it continues, discourage discriminating travelers, he predicted, and an effort is under way to improve Hawaii's image in what the tourism industry calls the upscale market

For 60 cents (exact fare needed) the city buses take visitors to or near most points of nterest in Honolulu and even clear around Oalm, the island on which the capital city is situated. Call 531-1611 for bus information. (The area code for the state is 808.)

All national car rental agencies are represented at the Honolulu International Airport and in Waikiki, the city's resort center. Drivers sometimes find Honolulu confusing because of the many one-way streets and inad-equate street signs, so it is advisable to plan routes in advance. When flying to another island, check the three competitive interisland carriers — Hawaiian Airlines (tel: 537-5100). Aloha Airlines (tel: 836-1111) and Mid Pacific Airlines (tel. 836-3313).

Virtually all first-time visitors to Honohilu go to Pearl Harbor to see the Arizona. Memorial, the national shrine built over the sunken battleship of that name in which more than 1,100 navy men died during the Japanese air attack on Dec. 7, 1941. Only the free tour offered by the U.S. Navy, which includes a documentary film, puts visitors on board the shrine itself. The boat for the navy tour leaves the Visitor Center, just west of the city, every 15 minutes between 8 A.M. and 3 P.M., except Mondays; it lasts about an hour and a quarter. Call 422-0561.

A visit to Paradise Park in Manoa Valley is a scenic tropical experience, with jungles to walk through, and performances by trained birds. A restaurant offers a view of rain forests and gardens. The valley is one of the rainiest spots on the island, so telephone (tel: 988-2141) to inquire about the weather. Open daily from 9:30 A.M. to 5 P.M. Admission $7.50; $3.75 for children between 4 and

Another popular attraction is the Polynesian Cultural Center in the town of Laie on the island's north shore. In a setting of recreated villages representing half a dozen Polynesian cultures, students from the nearby branch campus of Brigham Young University demonstrate traditional dances and arts and crafts. Admission is $14 for adults, $10.50 for children, with an extra charge for lunch or dinner and an elaborate evening performance of island dances. For more information, call 923-1861. The center does not serve alcohol and is closed on Sunday. The Bishop Museum, 1525 Bernice Street, is one of the world's leading repositories of Polynesian artifacts. Call 847-1443 for a tape-recorded message on the museum and the attached planetarium. Admission is $4.75; $2.75 for children 6 through 17. The museum is open daily from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M.

Outstanding collections of vivid tropical fish, sharks and other marine creatures in simulations of their natural habitat can be seen at the Waikiki Aquarium, a short walk from the heart of Waikiki. The aquarium is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. Admission $1.50; children under 16 free.

A trip to Waimea Falls Park on the north shore two hours by the No. 52 bus from Ala Moana Center, can be a memorable all-day excursion through some of the island's most beautiful natural surroundings.

For a real understanding of the city, past and present, spend a couple of hours walking around its compact downtown — morning is the best time, being cooler. A good starting oint is Iolani Palace, the former residence of the last Hawaiian monarchs, about 20 minutes from Waikiki by the No.2 bus. To arrange a guided tour of this building the only royal palace in the United States, telephone 536-6185. Nearby is the historic Kawaiahao Church, known as the Westminster Abbey of Hawaii, where sermons are still delivered in the Hawaiian language.

Most of Oahn's 157 hotels and condominiums — nearly 38,000 rooms, cottages and apartments — are crammed into Waikiki. which is seven-tenths of a mile (about onekilometer) square.

The newest addition to the Waikiki skyline is the rebuilt Halekulani Hotel (2199 Kalia Road, Honolulu 96815; 923-2311). Under the new owners, Mitsui of Japan, the informal cottage atmosphere of the old Halekulani has been replaced by an emphasis on elegance. The new construction consists of four interconnected buildings in a stepped design rising to 17 stories, but retaining the old main building. Nearly all the 456 rooms have sea views. Prices range from $145 a day to $2,000 for the deluxe suites.

Still a favorite is the venerable Royal Hawaiian Hotel, the "Pink Palace," right on the beach (2259 Kalakaua Avenue, Honolulu

Because of the large population with roots in various Asian countries, Honolulu is known for the variety and excellence of its ethnic restaurants. Personal favorites over the years include the Maple Garden (909) Isenberg Street; tel: 941-6641), whose Chi-nese specialties include smoked duck; Keo's Thai Crieine (625 Kanabula Avanue, tel: Thai Cuisine (625 Kapahulu Avenue; tel: 737-8240) and Odoriko (Koa Avenue, opposite the Hyatt Regency Hotel: tel: 923-7368). for Japanese fare. All are reasonably priced.

For an authentic Polynesian meal, my the $9.75 Hawaiian dinner at the Tahitian Lanai, the poolside restaurant of the Waikikian Hotel (1811 Ala Moana Boulevard; tel: 946-6541). The menu includes kalua pig (oven-roasted pork) and pipikaula (jerked beef).

A dependable old favorite with excellent food and service at moderate prices is the Canlis, sometimes called the Canlis Broiler (2100 Kalakaua Avenue; tel: 923-2324). It abruptly dropped its strict jacket-and-tie rule after King Hussem of Jordan and his entourage, unaware of the regulation, showed up one night in aloha shirts.

Oahu and other islands contain many in-viting wilderness trails for hikers. However, before choosing one, check with the outdoor recreation section of the State Department of Land and Natural Resources (tel: 548-7455) to be sure that your choice is not one of those the agency has listed as dangerous because of a history of holdups and unpleasant encounters with marijuana growers. Of 25 popular trails on Oahu, 13 are so listed.

The Hawaii Visitors Bureau has an office in the Waikiki Business Plaza (2270 Kalakaua Avenue; tel: 923-1811), where tourists can pick a listing of fairs, festivals and other special events on all the islands.

Updating Clam Chowder

· mented with or created a clam chowder that was completely to our liking. The clam bits in both soups (unless canned) were too rubbery or chewy. The solution is not only in the seasonings but in the preparation of the clams. The tough "muscles" of the clams were chopped in the container of a food processor and the bits simmered with the remaining ingredients until tender. The soft body portions were then chopped and added toward the end.

Some years ago, we discovered a recipe in a regional French cookbook for a chaudière de poisson, fish chowder, and adapted it. We we elaborated on the original ingredients, out basically, it is a chowder with a French Tavor.

Losers Win in Quebec

Quebec's separatist movement, as a crucial force in Canadian politics, has now ended. Its great advocate for the past 17 years, the Parti Québecois, voted at its convention in Montreal last weekend to loosen fatally its commitment to the cause. The party continues to favor an independent Quebec in principle, but it no longer intends to make independence the issue in the next provincial election.

The vote was an acknowledgment that, among French Canadians, the impulse toward national independence has been fading fast.

The party's membership is falling, and the surge of enthusiasm for sovereignty that carried it to power in Quebec nine years ago will no longer keep it there. The leadership of the Parti Quebecois decided that, if it wants to stay in office, it is going to have to set aside indefinitely any serious talk of separation. This outcome of the separatist challenge is a triumph for Canadian democracy. There was a time, in the middle 1970s, when it seemed that Canada was not far from splitting into two or perhaps more fragments. It was not easy to see the terms on which French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians might be reconciled. But the federal structure held.

One reason was the language law that the Parti Québecois enacted, requiring much wider use of French in the province. That met the sharpest grievance of the French-speaking population - that they frequently could not use their own language to earn their livings and carry out their business in a province in which they were the majority by nearly four to one.

One consequence of that law was a shift by some businesses to Toronto, an unwelcome reminder of the economic costs that national independence might impose. But there is more to it than that.

In Quebec 25 years ago the English-speaking minority was urban and educated — the managerial and professional middle class. Quebec's working class, and the countryside. mostly spoke French, and among them the average level of education was well short of a high school diploma. But in the 1960s, after years of political passivity, French Canada began to press aggressively its claims to equality. That generated the separatist movement. Nearly a generation later, French is far more widely used in business in Quebec. More important, the tremendous expansion of higher education has greatly increased opportunities for young French Canadians and expanded the numbers of them in technical and managerial jobs. Language lines no longer follow so closely the boundaries of social and economic class. The separatists' failure as a party of political revolution owes much to their historic success as a party of social reform.

Zeal in New Zealand

The latest episode in the trials and tribulations of the United States as an alliance leader is unfolding in New Zealand. The new Labor government there said it would not let nuclearpowered or nuclear-armed ships enter its ports or waters. The United States responded, entirely properly, that such a prohibition was inconsistent with New Zealand's obligations under the ANZUS treaty binding the two countries and Australia. This is the time of year when these things are ordinarily arranged, and the United States is now testing the New Zealanders by requesting permission for U.S. Navy warships to make a routine port call in March. A countdown of sorts has begun.

What most strikes the American eye is New Zealand's evident zeal for this gathering friction. The impetus does not lie simply in the familiar European-style combination of anti-nuclear and leftist elements. The cause appears to be genuinely popular and nationalistic: a small country making its special contribution to the harnessing of the world's nuclear furies. New Zealand may not be troubled by threats to its security, but large parts of its electorate are agitated by the perceived challenge to its integrity as a sovereign state.

The United States has been trying to talk the new prime minister, David Lange, a Methodist preacher's son, into finding a way to continue the defense cooperation required for a working alliance. Mr. Lange's response is perhaps best indicated by his scheduled participation in a coming Oxford Union debate with the Reverend Jerry Falwell on the motion "that the Western nuclear alliance is morally indefensible." Mr. Lange is arguing the affirmative. It was always possible for Washington to avert its gaze, pretend that Labor's election was a bad dream and wait for a fresh turn of New Zealand's political wheel. For there can be no pleasure or profit in entering into what is bound to be a tense encounter with an ally an encounter, moreover, that can easily be painted in David vs. Goliath colors. But an alliance that is an alliance only in the even-numbered years is not an alliance. And the leader of several alliances does not have the luxury of sitting it out. Its leadership responsi-bilities require it to make its best fair effort to engage its fellow democracies' participation in the agreed modes of cooperation.

New Zealand retains its sovereign right to decide whether alliance with the United States still serves its national needs.

That is insufficient reason for the United States to engage in unilateral political disarmament. Better to stay at The Hague and argue that whatever it is doing with respect to Nicaragua it is doing with its friends in collective self-defense against Nicaragua's depredations against them. That is its case, isn't it?

Regrettably, the World Court is not the only or the most important forum on Central America from which the Reagan administration is currently departing. It has just suspended the bilateral talks with Nicaragua that it had been conducting since mid-1984 in Mexi-co. The reason given for halting the talks is the same as the reason cited for entering them: to induce Managua to be more cooperative in the Contadora discussions of a regional solution.

The impression conveyed is that the administration is toughening its line. To what purpose? It is four years since Mr. Reagan entered the White House, and the basic ambiguity of

The Reagan administration has pulled out his policy is intact. Acceptance of a Sandinist hearts suggest to the Sandinists, and to many others, an intent to overthrow the regime.

A clear sign of the possibilities of coexis-tence is needed. The form it should take is for the administration to let the contra operation end. That is the Carlos Andres Perez solution. The former president of Venezuela declined to attend Daniel Ortega Saavedra's inauguration as president of Nicaragua on grounds that the Sandinists had discouraged a role for the op-position and thereby "cheated" friends of their revolution. Yet he opposes the U.S.-sponsored insurgency and is pressing for withdrawal of both the U.S. and the Cuban-Soviet presence in the region and for consolidation of the Nicaraguan revolution on the basis of pluralism, a mixed economy and nonalignment.

Other Opinion

The wild conjectures from New Delhi about Indian "Quislings" betraying vital defense se-crets to foreign agents for as little as a bottle of scotch appear to fit all too familiar a pattern. True, the deputy military attaché of the French Embassy has left under a cloud, and the government has detained 16 people, including some aides close to the offices of the prime

A Murky Spy Scandal in India

What may be safely conceded is that lately there has been an alarming drop in the efficiency and morale of India's intelligence and security services. How alarming was brought home by two incidents. One was the lack of adequate intelligence about the arms buildup inside the Golden Temple in Amritsar when the Indian army stormed it in June, suffering needlessly high casualties. The other was the unexplained lapses in the security detail assigned to guard Prime Minister Indira Gandhi. - South China Morning Post (Hong Kong).

1935: Britain Publishes India Bill

LONDON — The government of India bill, which if adopted will grant Home Rule to India, was published [on Jan. 24]. The text follows the project for federal government for India approved last November by committees appointed by the House of Commons and the House of Lords. In view of the agitation which has raged around the earlier draft, it may be stated that the bill will satisfy neither the Conservatives, led by Winston Churchill, nor the Pan-Indian Congress, which demands complete independence. Mahatma Gandhi, who formerly opposed the federation scheme as head of the Congress, modified his attitude recently, but his new policy will not be known until he makes his statement when the contents of the bill are published in New Delhi.

Far too intimate and suggestice a stance, Mr. Shultz — farther apart, if you please!"

The Case Against Belief in Arms Control

N EW YORK — Even some enthusiasts of arms control admitted that there was something almost dementedly disproportionate in the press and television coverage of the Shultz-Gromyko meeting in Geneva. What troubled these appropriates was the denors that excessive expecenthusiasts was the danger that excessive expec-tations might be aroused, leading to disappoint-ments that would bring discredit upon the entire process of arms control negotiations.

But what if the journalistic treatment inadvertently exposed a truth about the illusions surrounding arms control that have taken root in our political culture in general?

These illusions rest on the idea that by negotiating with the Soviets we can not only cut down the size of the arsenals on both sides but can also render them less threatening, thus increasing stability and reducing the risk of nuclear war. This idea is so widely taken as intellectually and morally self-evident that anyone who questions it is treated with incredulity and outrage. Yet there is virtually no evidence to support the faith in arms control, and a great deal of evidence that makes it seem altogether irrational.

Consider the record. In the 1920s and '30s, belief in disarmament produced a series of agreements between the Western democracies and their totalitarian enemies of that period, Japan and Germany. The best that can be said for those agreements is that if their purpose was to prevent the outbreak of war, they obviously failed. The worst that can be said — and it has been said by Eugene Rostow, a former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is that those agreements helped to bring on while also cheating on its sister agreement, the World War II "by inhibiting the possibility of Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 (another He contributed this to The New York Times.

military preparedness" through which Britain and France could have deterred the war. Most students of the period accept this assessment. Some argue that nuclear weapons have created a greater incentive to disarmament than existed in the pre-nuclear age. Yet the arms control agreements of the nuclear age have never made good on their promise of reductions in the quantity or quality of nuclear arsenals.

The Test Ban Treaty of 1963, one of the proudest achievements of the arms control pro-cess, may have driven the testing of new nuclear weapons underground, but it has diminished neither the number of tests nor the number of new weapons developed in such tests.

Nor have the limitations established by negotiation realized their promise of greater stability. Thus the placing of more than one warhead on a single missile, now regarded by almost all arms control enthusiasts as destabilizing, was itself a product of the first strategic arms limitation treaty, which restricted the number of missiles rather than the number of warheads.

Arms control in the nuclear age also resembles the disarmament treaties of the 1920s and '30s in another way: It has led to cutbacks by the democratic side and increases on the totalitarian side. As Japan and Germany did with the disarmament agreements of the 1930s, the Soviet Union took full advantage of what was legally permitted under the first citation agest limitation treaty.

under the first strategic arms limitation treaty - crease the quantity and improve the quality of its weapons. The United States, following the precedent of the democracies in the 1930s, slashed its military budgets in the years between the two strategic arms limitations agreements.

There is nothing accidental about this pattern. In the nuclear age, no less than in the pre-nuclear age, the democracies, for economic and other reasons, have been eager to spend as little as possible on defense. Their totalitarian enemies, in a relentless pursuit of imperialist expansion and hegemony, have been just as eager for mili-tary superiority. Given these asymmetrical aims, arms control talks have inevitably served as a screen for unilateral cuts by the democratic side.

In short, neither the historical record nor the nature of the superpower conflict provides ratio-nal justification for the faith in arms control. We are far more justified in characterizing this faith as the great superstition of our time.

Like all superstitions, this one is rooted in fear, and like all superstitions, this one is rooted in fear, and like all fears it can easily prompt action whose unintended consequence will be to bring about the very thing it is meant to avoid. This could happen — indeed it is already happening — through erosion of support for defense spending and a weakening of the U.S. military capability that has been the only reliable guarantor of the could be a support of the could be considered. peace in the nuclear age. Worse yet, it could bring abandonment of the Strategic Defense Initiative, which does hold out rational hope for eventual escape from the threat of nuclear war.

party apparatus, the police and the Soviet KGB, which protects its own men operating in Poland.

The group that took over the retime on Dec. 13, 1981, owes its survival mainly to the police, which has obeyed orders even when it meant firing into crowds made up of brothers, fathers and friends.

In exchange for such loyalty, these forces took the state hostage. They have had the privileges that the state can offer, particularly immunity from prosecution. Kidnappings and killings have been the work of "unknowns." Solidarity activists have died during police interrogation, but never has a policeman been found guilty of such a murder.

That kind of impunity breeds vigilantes. Four of them went too far and are thus guilty of professional negligence — their plan did not work as expected. They will be condemned. But others will continue.

Unless ... Unless General Wojciech Jaruzelski, the prime minister, takes advantage of the opportunity offered to him by the ex-officers' tri-al. Forecasting Slow Death For Britain

What Americans and others from rich countries mostly do about Brit. ain is cluck at its economic misfor tune—and take advantage. Britain is already thick with tourists and it will be more so. More foreigners will fly over for the Harrods sale, or buy property in London. For such it will be forever England, cozy and quaint. But much that the world valued in England and Scotland and Wales is being eaten away by the economic decline. For example, when J.K. Gal-braith wrote of "private affluence and public squalor" in the United States, we saw a contrasting picture in Britain. We saw its parks and public transportation, its government:

support for the arts. Now those pub-lic investments are being squeezed. Peter Jenkins of The Guardian, the leading British political columnist wrote last month about the conse quences "of a decade and a half of accelerated decline." He quoted an observer of 17th-century Spain as saying that its decline had become so rapid that "one can actually see it accurring from one year to the pert".

occurring from one year to the next."

Mr. Jenkins said: "We see it ourselves. We see urban delapidation and squalor, a rotting housing stock and rusting transport facilities, shabby-looking people in filthy streets and public places, things everywhere broken or not working. One of Mrs.

Thatcher's former cabinet ministers. David Howell, has noticed this 'even in the weeds and broken pavements

at Hyde Park Corner

Even more depressing than physical decay is the sense of decline in things of the mind. A country whose laboratories once illuminated the scientific world has cut way back on scientific research. The money available for universities is down, and in all likelihood it is going down further.

"Here we have a case study in the politics of decline," Mr. Jenkins said of that. "Our basic research, our technological innovativeness — surely among the keys to future competitiveness and prosperity — cannot be kept up because we are already too poor, too uncompetitive."

More than 3 million Britons are unemployed, a rate approaching 13 ----percent. A depressing part of that picture is the unemployment among university graduates. Many of the brightest young women and men have been in part-time work for years; or on the dole, because there are no jobs in their fields.

Economists and historians have traced the decline back to Victorian times. The rot set in, they suggest, even as the empire reached its apogee. The country emphasized glory abroad over enterprise at home. I rewarded philosophers and sneered at businessmen. The roots of the British disease, it is often said, are deep. But the politicians of the last 20 years or so have certainly accelerated the trend. First place in the parade of " fools must go to Sir Harold Wilson, the Labor prime minister who came the Labor prime minister who came to power in 1964 talking about what size the white heat of technology would do for Britain, and then proceeded to do for Britain, and then proceeded to drift in a dream world of his own accomplishments invisible to others. But prime ministers of both parties have done their bit since then. Margaret Thatcher is distinguished among the postwar prime ministers by her rigid belief in one economic faith: monetarism. She has pursued it long past rationality, greeting the unemployment figures and the physical decay with talk about how industry has shed its surplus fat and is now in fighting trim. Yet that same industry, with all the advantages of a low with all the advantages of a low passed is losing out in exports. faith: monetarism. She has pursued it 🐛 🚐 pound, is losing out in exports.

The worst of it is the lack of 2 credible political alternative now. Labor has moved so far to the left, and is so riven by the continuing coal strike, that it hardly seems a potential governing party. The Alliance of Liberals and Social Democrats is looking up but has not reached the point of credibility for many voters.

Peter Jenkins has chronicled the decline for years now. Sometimes he has seen the chance for a miraculous regeneration. But last fall he took the gloomy view that the adaptation that would be required of us, after all that has gone before, will prove too great — and that, like Venice, success will consist in managing a long, civi-lized and dignified demise."

Sovereignty in Lebanon Regarding "Israel Blames Lebanon for Halt in Talks" (Jan. 8):

A clarification of Lebanon's position may help to correct any misun-derstanding among your readers. Lebanon has always advocated an expanded role for United Nations forces, and believes that the United Nations can make a significant contribution to establishing peace and security in the frontier region.

Lebanon has also undertaken to guarantee security arrangements on her southern border.

Clearly no breach of sovereignty is acceptable within her territory, and therefore Lebanon cannot permit any force other than her own army to provide security and maintain the rule of law in southern Lebanon. Israel's attempts to make use - in some areas of the national territory — of the so-called South Lebanon Army (or Southern Lebanon militia), which is sponsored and armed by israel, are consequently rejected by the government of Lebanon as attempts to partition the country. General AHMED EL-HAJJ. Ambassador of Lebanon.

104 Research Efforts Picked

EC Lists

The Associated Press BRUSSELS — The Enropean Community selected 104 projects last year to start the first five-year phase of a 10-year research program aimed at closing the technology gap with the United States, the community said Thursday.

The projects' total cost is 360 million European currency units

($252 million). Half of each project is being financed by the EC Commission and half by the participants — predominantly companies, universities and research

The program's only non-European links are to the European sub-sidiaries of four U.S.-based multinational corporations: ITT Corp., International Business Machines Corp., American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and Digital Equipment Corp. No Japanese companies are involved.

Additional projects to be chosen later will bring the five-year cost of the program to 1.5 billion ECU.

The program, approved by EC governments last February, is known as the European Strategic Program for Research and Development in Information Technology, or Esprit.

The EC Commission said its initial selections, from 441 proposals submitted, were final.

Esprit is designed to promote co-operation between European businesses and academic institutions in developing advanced microelectronics, software technology, advanced information processing, office systems and computer-aided manufacturing.

Much controversy was stirred over how many non-European companies should be allowed to participate. The link to IBM is particularly sensitive. A senior EC official said Thursday that a more visible IBM presence in Esprit would have been politically unpopular with member governments.

The official said IBM's only involvement would be the participation of its West German subsidiary. The French statement was the first official word that the United States has intervened in world money markets in line with last week's declaration by the five major Western industrial countries that they would try to check any excessive surge by the dollar.

HOW CONTRARIANS REALIZED 800% PROFITS

In 1982, while the DOW was drooping under 800, when the majority of seers were beartsh, we rebuked the consensus, predicting "THE DJI WILL TOLCH 1,000 BEPORE HITTING 750". It is also nveiting to recall that at, or near, the nadir of despair, prestigious publication featured a story headlined: "The Death of Equities". Their orthodoxy bromeranged; the Bull rampaged to 1290, our optimism was vindicated. After the market soared: the same magazine released an article entitled: "The Re-Birth of Equities". Once again, they were myopic; the market segged. A month ago, Business Week published alengthy discourse with the scalding title: "The Death of Mining" an obituary for the North American mining industry.

Our cerebral juices stir, we challenge their prosaid thinking. "Power Elitists" are preconditioned to buy into weakness, to sell into strength, is we recognized when our researchers recommended BOEING at $16, FORD around $17,G.M. ($39, SEARS under $19 (before splits), and other seasoned shares that the "Street" once sconed, misguided by herd instinct. What gurus fail to divine is that "misery" has already been faccined into the price of AMAX, ASARCO, INCO, NEWMONT, NORANDA and PHELPS DODGE, that to sell after the "Group" has been decimated is to defy logic. When Elltists are ready to peddle their inventories, the Group will undergo a metamorphosis; fiscal events are rarely sontaneous combustion, movements are orchestrated.

Our forthcoming letter discusses why the DJI will gaop over 1500, why mining shares will recover; in addition, CGR focuses upon a low-priced quity with the dynamics to vaulit to prominence, emulating the success of a recently recommended "special situation" that escalated 800% in a brief time-span. 2 Firms Develop Insect-Defense Gene for Crops

PHILADELPHIA -- Robin & Haas Co. and Plant Genetic Systems NV of Brussels have announced an advance in ge-netic engineering that they said could lead to the development of crops resistant to insects.

However, the companies said the commercial potential of the research was not yet known. For the first time, "an agriculturally important gene of bacterial origin was incorporated successfully into tobacco plants, providing the potential for plants to defend themselves against destructive insects," the companies said Wednesday.

Scientists altered the tobacco plants' genetic structure to produce a protein which has been widely used for many years in biological sprays to fight in-sects, the companies said. Rohm & Haas is a chemical oducer based in Philadelphia. Plant Genetic Systems was esblished in March 1983 to apply genetics to crop plants.

To authorize the Trustee from time to time to concur in and execute all deeds and documents, in form approved by the committee, supplemental to the Trust Indenture and embodying any modification, abrogation, alteration, compromise or arrangement of the rights of the Debentureholders and couponholders against the Company or against its property and any modification of or change in or omission from the provisions contained in the Trust Indenture which shall have been sanctioned by the committee.

 Electing persons (who need not be Debentureholders) who so consent to serve on the committee contemplated by I above, and for such purpose proposed candidates for membership on the said committee may be nominated by another Debentureholder or themselves. Nominations may be made either at the meeting or by written notice delivered to the Trustee c/o Orion Royal Bank Limited as set forth below on or prior to the business day immediately preceding the day of the meeting.

The said meeting is being convened at the request of the Company in order to afford to the Debentureholders an opportunity to establish a committee to negotiate with the Company with respect to the Debentureholders' participation in the restructuring of the Company's indebtedness. Senior management representatives of the Company will be available at the meeting for discussion purposes.

This notice is given pursuant to the provisions of the Trust Indenture with the intent that any extraordinary resolution or extraordinary resolutions passed at the said meeting or any adjournment thereof shall, if passed in accordance with the provisions contained in the Trust Indenture in that behalf, be binding upon all the Debentureholders, whether present or absent, and couponholders and each and every Debentureholder and the Trustee (subject to the provisions for its indemnity contained in the Trust Indenture) shall be bound to give effect thereto accordingly, with the further intent that in considering and/or passing any resolution, extraordinary or otherwise, such meeting may modify, amend, change, amplify, add to or omit any of the matters and things hereinbefore specified, it being stipulated that the foregoing does not purport to specify the terms of any resolution or resolutions to be proposed at the meeting, but only to indicate the general nature of the business to be transacted thereat and in general terms the subject matter of any extraordinary resolution or extraordinary resolutions to be submitted thereat.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Trust Indenture and regulations made thereunder, Debentureholders desiring to be present and vote at the meeting without producing their Debentures may deposit same with any of the depositaries named below and will receive in exchange voting certificates which will entitle the holder named therein to be present and vote at the meeting and at any adjournment thereof and to appoint a proxy (who need not be a Debentureholder) to represent and vote for the holder at such meeting and at any adjournment thereof in the same way as if the holder so named in the voting certificate were the actual bearer of the Debentures specified in such voting certificate; Debentures so deposited will be held on deposit until after the meeting and any adjournment thereof and will then be returned to the depositor.

Copies of recently-published financial reports concerning the Company and other publicly-available information relevant to its restructuring, together with instructions and forms for depositing Debentures, forms of voting certificates, specimens of instruments of proxy, forms to nominate candidates for the committee and other information may be obtained on application to any of the depositaries at the addresses set forth below.

Save as aforesaid, the only persons who shall be recognized at the meeting or any adjournment thereof as the holders of any Debentures or as entitled to vote or be present at the meeting or any adjournment thereof shall be the persons who produce Debentures and/or voting certificates at the meeting or any adjournment thereof.

In the event that the said meeting shall be adjourned by reason of failure to attain a quorum, those Debentureholders present in person or by proxy at the adjourned meeting may transact the business contemplated by this notice.

For the convenience of Debentureholders unable to attend the meeting, proxies, voting certificates and forms to nominate candidates for the committee may be sent to Montreal Trust Company of Canada, c/o Orion Royal Bank Limited, Principal Paying Agent, 1 London Wall, London, England EC2Y 5JX, Attention: Colin Tibbles, and, in order to be relied upon, must be received at such address on or prior to the business day immediately preceding the date of the meeting.

FRENCH RIVIERA My address in Nice? Domaine de Clairefontaine Bd. Impératrice Eugénie I am active, and I need calm as well as the amentities of a town-center nearby.

Rather private, I wanted to live in a humansized residence surrounded by a private park to enjoy the charm and freshness of lawns, flowers and trees...

Sporting, I needed a residence with a swimming pool, close to the beaches. Romantic, I needed a comfortable, cosy apartment in which to share my happiness.

A dreamer, I wanted the sea for horizon... The Domaine of Clairefontaine seduced me. I have discovered the sweet life. I found myself. Do like me... Information and visit on the premises

From The International Herald Tribune 1887-1980

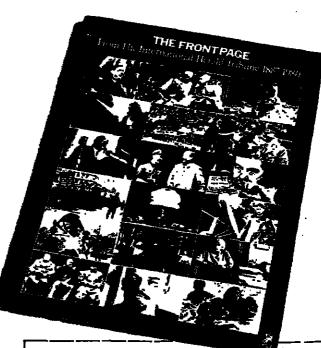

On every page of this documentary book, you'll feel the urgency of great historical news stories as if they were breaking today. Reproductions of 129 front pages, many with Herald Tribune exclusive articles: like the firsthand report from the sinking Titanic by a Tribune reporter who was aboard, the Dreyfus trial, the Venice campanile caught in mid-collapse by a Tribune photographer!

Follow coverage of the First World War by one of the few newspapers that stayed in Paris and was virtually edited at the front.

Read about people — Queen Victoria, Lindbergh, Jack the Ripper, the Windsors, Stalin — a century of news headliners and the events that surrounded them.

Hard cover, 28 x 38 centimeters, readablesize text. The book is divided into five chronological sections, each with an introduction describing the period from historical and journalistic viewpoints.

THE FRONT PAGE is a distinctive personal or business gift. Order one – or several – today. Please allow 3 weeks for delivery.

TALES OF A LONG NIGHT

By Alfred Doeblin. Translated from the German by Robert and Rita Kimber. 486 pp. Cloth $18.95. Paper $12.95. Fromm. 560 Lexington Avenue,

New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by John Gross

OVER the past year or two the German novelist Alfred Doeblin has aroused more interest in this country than he ever did during his lifetime, thanks partly to Rainer Werner Fassbinder's film version of "Berlin Alexandetplatz and partly to the appearance of an English translation of "November 1918." Doeblin's trilogy about the abortive German revolution led by Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht. Neither work, however, will do much to prepare readers for Doeblin's last novel, which he began in 1945 toward the end of his exile in Hollywood and finished in Baden-Baden the following year, and which has now been translated as "Tales of a Long Night." (A literal rendering of the original title would be "Hamlet, or the Long Night Comes to an End," which spells out one of the book's major themes more clearly.)

"Tales of a Long Night" is the story of a young Englishman called Edward Allison who loses a leg during World War II and returns home a nervous as well as a physical wreck. tormented by doubt and anger, and obsessed with what seems to him the mystery of where the blame for the war really lies. He is released from a clinic in the hope that living among his family will hasten his cure, but he simply transfers his fixation with hidden guilt to the domestic front

In an effort to exorcise his demons, the Allisons and their friends start telling a series of stories, many of them variations on ancient myths and legends. Some of these tales serve to reveal the character of the storyteller, others as a riposte or as a comment on what has gone before. All of them are meant to advance the psychological and spiritual action.

Edward's father, for example, confirms his reputation for stripping away romance by re-counting a version of the story of the troubadour Rudel and his quest for the Princess of Tripoli, in which the princess — the original Princess Lointaine — turns out to be a hideous old crone. Edward's uncle, a sagacious scholar equally at home with Celtic myth and Eastern wisdom declines his nephew's request to tell the story of Hamlet (it would come too close to home) but offers instead to tell the true story of Lear, in which the king emerges as a ravenous middle-aged brute laying waste his own kingdom, a very different proposition from Shake-speare's Lear — and one in whom Edward thinks he can see the moral lineaments of the father he detests.

Many of the tales of Doeblin's long night have an undoubted lurid power. But there are too many of them, and they ramify too rapidly. We move through an expressionist phantasmagoria from a wayward bus in Los Angeles to Pluto and Proserpina, by way of Michelangelo and Salome and a mock-medieval tale about the Virgin. Edward's mother, Alice Allison (a significant name, we can be sure), spins variants of a story about a mother who waits for her son to come back from the war, now in Montmartre, now in Germany, and elaborated on the already elaborate legend of her patrosaint, Theodora.

We would have a firmeding of the control of the con and, Theodora.

We would have a firmer sense of our bear ges if the stories were set in a more consistent realistic framework. But the Alliese annual set of the stories were set in a more consistent annual set of the stories were set in a more consistent. ings if the stories were set in a more consistent ly realistic framework. But the Allisons live in dreamlike atmosphere, where events tend to obey their own looking-glass logic and symbol. proliferate like tropical vegetation. Edward'. father, in particular, is as much of a gargoyle a half the characters in the tales he and his companions exchange — indeed, for much of the time he is rather disconcertingly referred to by the name of one such character, a mysteri-

The unreality is heightened by an English setting that is in some respects quite weirdly un-English. Perhaps this is a deliberate effect on Doeblin's part, a parody of England as it used to be portrayed in country-house detec-

In the final stages of the book the distinction between framework and fantasy starts to break down completely. Edward's mother embarks on a surreal journey in the course of which she changes her name, enters a beauty clinic that is-described in terms of a witches' kitchen, engages in philosophical dialogues with a wealthy lover, and goes on the stage as part of a mind-reading act. We move from England to France.

but it all remains deeply Teutonic.
Yet through the haze it is possible to discern a continuous story unfolding. Edward learns something about his parentage that seems to make sense of his emotional predicament, and then has to unlearn it. Love and hate are not so easily located as he supposes, deceptions are not so easily unmasked. And in the end he is cured of his neurosis, or at any rate set on the road to recovery, through a combination of faith and self-awareness.

A family reunion shadowed by guilt, the borderland between therapy and salvation—there are some curious parallels between
"Tales of a Long Night" and the plays of T. S.
Eliot. At its deepest levels it is heavily colored by Doeblin's religious convictions—an agnos tic Jew, he converted to Roman Catholicism in 1940 — and there can be no doubting the seriousness with which he devotes himself to major themes. But as a novel the book is too cluttered and too melodramatic to achieve more than a limited and fitful success.

Quietly, patiently, gently, Moses had continued to go about his business. Advertisers had flocked to him, wanting to associate their products with his name and impeccable reputation. He carned an estimated $1 million last year — legal under current amateur guidelines — and it was expected he would top that this year.

He also made time to visit schools and speak to youngsters about the necessity not to drop out and to tell them that athletics should play a secondary role to academics.

He was a family man, married, and the son of educators from Dayton, Ohio.

Moses was a role model of the highest order.

the league's best defense last year and is in the running for that honor again this year. The goaltending of Pat Riggin (21 saves) and Bob Ma-son has been outstanding.

And the Capitals now have the big goal-scorer they've lacked in center Bob Carpenter.

Carpenter scored two goals, including his sixth game-winner of the season, for Washington, which has lost only four times in the last 29 games. He now has a career-high 37 goals in only 48 games and is within four of the record for an American-born player, set last year by Joey Mullen of St. Louis. The Black Hawks, who have lost seven of their last 11 contests, were impressed with the Capitals.

There is no doubt about it, Washington is a very disciplined team," said Chicago center Denis Savard. "They come at you all night. They don't lay back and let you become an offensive team.

"I have to give them credit because they do everything well and and excellent defense and great forechecking, it's an unbeatable com-bination."

Washington has won five consec-utive games and 13 of 16 away from home for a three-point lead over the Flyers in the Patrick Division.

Elsewhere Wednesday night, it was Los Angeles 6. Philadelphia 3; Minnesota 4, Pittsburgh 3; Calgary 6, New Jersey 3, and Winnipeg 6, Vancouver 4.

Reaching for the Stars

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — My fears about America's stars began three weeks ago with a yawn in the middle of People magazine. I couldn't believe that yawn! Surely I had never yawned in People before, had I? Or had I? Maybe I had been yawning for months and had been too sleepy to notice.

But no - it couldn't have been. My weekly People was too precious to me. It comforted me. That fantastic weekly catalog of the United States's stars - it was my confdence builder.

Turning the pages to review that inexhaustible procession of stars passing under my gaze always made me feel better about the world. The Russians will never catch us in the star race, at least not in my lifetime — that was the way I felt, and it was a good feeling, even though there was no evidence that the Russians were secretly engaged in a crash star-development program to close the star gap.

And what if they were? Did they have the know-how to come up with a Russian star of the magnitude of Cary Grant, Elizabeth Taylor, Frank Sinatra?

I am describing here the secure feeling of the past, of the time that preceded my yawn three weeks ago in People. That yawn was a shocker because - well, if American stars have such tremendons power, why would anybody be yawning at them?

Alarmed and now alert, I examined People closely with a growing picion that a crisis was in the making. Yes, yes — good heavens!

The magazine was crammed with pictures of people who looked like stars; that is, they had stars' teeth, stars' dimples, stars' hair stylings. Among them were a few of the old familiar stars, the stars every magazine editor and TV panel host has in mind when issuing the command to "round up the usual stars."

There was John Travolta with pectorals exposed. Raquel Welch with pectorals concealed. Jane Fonda, Sophia Loren, Bette Midler, the great Liz were all there as usual, but it was the presence of the great Liz that deepened my

Except for the great Liz, could phia possibly. Jane Fonda? Well sure, but let's be honest: When somebody speaks of "the great Fonda," it's Henry you think of, isn't it? As for Travolta and Raquel, they are surely nice people, probably just as nice as their pectorals, but if we are talking sex-object stars and why else would we be so concerned with pectorals? - Raquel is no Mae West and Travolta is a feeble replacement for the great Errol Flynn.

Scanning the rest of this alarming issue of People, what else do we

Jimmy Carter. All right, a decent man. But a star? In Clark Gable's day we had Franklin Roosevelt. That's a star, folks. In Clark Gable's day we also had Clark Gable. Now in this issue of People we have Sylvester Stallone, Larry Hagman, Barry Manilow, Jack Wagner, Jamie Lee Curtis, Julian Lennon and Kyle MacLachlan. In terms of star megatonnage, if Gable was the Hbomb, these fellows in People, talented though they may be, are a box of Fourth of July sparklers. People in star business say this dangerous dilution of the product has been necessitated by the tremendous demand for stars to fill TV shows about the stars, breakfast-time and late-night televised interviews with the stars, maga-zines and newspaper columns that traffic in the stars as well as scandal sheets that humiliate the stars. A single weekly magazine like People. which requires stars for its readers to envy, uses up approximately 2,000 stars a year.

The result is pleasant for Americans who yearn for stardom. The need for stars is so desperate that almost anyone can get into star work. I myself have starred briefly not only in People, but also on the Merv Griffin show, and might have gone on to notoriety in The Nation-al Enquirer if I had wanted stardom enough to have my teeth replaced, my hair dyed and the wattles under my chin surgically removed. I declined - though if the Rus sians surprise us with a Cary Grantski, a Tayloronovna and a Sinatravich, I will make the sacrifice for my country.

Invitation to the Dance, That's Gene Kelly

By Anna Kisselgoff

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Gene Kelly
came to lowe the address. came to town the other day to talk about dance - not exactly a foreign subject to him, and hardly irrelevant to "That's Dancing," the new film for which he is the chief narrator and executive producer. Like the movie an anthology of dance-on-film ex-cerpts — Kelly himself represents a wide range of dance over the decades.

If the entire world seemingly knows of Kelly's contribution to film musicals, few of his fans may be aware of how far-reaching the dance background was that got him to the top and kept him there as dancer, choreographer and di-

Like Martha Graham, Kelly hails from Pittsburgh, and like her he first attracted attention on Broadway under the sponsorship of the noted producer John Mur-ray Anderson. Few balletomanes may know that his most influential ballet teacher, Berenice Holmes, was the original Polyhymnia in the commissioned pre-miere of Stravinsky's "Apollo," choreographed by Adolph Bolm in 1927. One year later, Serge Diaghilev assigned the same score to George Balanchine.

A Diaghilev dancer and Bolshoi alumnus, Alexander Kotchetovsky, helped round out Kelly's ballet education in the 1930s, when he was also learning to do a mean Romanian chain dance and Polish mazurka at dance teachers' conventions. The tap and acro-batics instilled in Kelly as a child were, as he put it, "a piece of cake" by the time he found a mentor in the Broadway choreographer Robert Alton — an un-sung innovator of the Broadway musical.

After Kelly had done a great deal to change the Hollywood musical, he created — using ballet dancers - the first American allfirst American-born choreographer to create a ballet for the Paris Opera Ballet, "Pas de

the same time, he sought to distin-guish his approach to dance as seen in films from those of stage choreographers in ballet.

"The thing that I do," he said. "is not the same as my friend Peter Martins or Jerry Robbins because they're with dance companies and they use dance with music to express a certain idea in the context of a complete dance that includes music.

The dancer in film for years has not done that. He takes a role. He gets a group of songs sometimes and interprets the role. If he is a truck driver, he cannot come out and dance in fifth position. Everybody would laugh. If he is a prince consort he would have to dance a certain way. If I played a pirate in the early 19th century, I certainly couldn't tap dance.

"So the role of the dancer is subject to the role he's playing and often very subject to the song that's composed. This doesn't happen in a dance company. The question is, who has the greater freedom?

Implicit behind his remarks is a dance philosophy that Kelly and a few other key figures did much to promote in the 1940s and '50s. The idea of the integrated musical - in which the dancing advances the plot - is now taken for granted on Broadway and on film ("Singin" in the Rain" is a prime example).

But in "Pal Joey," the Rodgers and Hart musical based on John O'Hara's stories that catapulted Kelly to stardom on Broadway in 1940 and then to Hollywood, his approach to dance was definitely "Anchors Aweigh" or "On the unleashed upon Paris in 1909. As Town." His trademark was specifically democratic: casual street dress, from rolled-up sleeves to slacks and loafers.

The deliberately masculine bravura style he cultivated for a dance-shy public in his early ca-reer could be traced to the ecumenism of his training. Berenice Holmes, with whom he studied ballet for several summers in Chicago in the 1930s, had danced with Adolph Bolm's companies in the ferocious warrior in the "Polovetsian Dances," Bolm re-mained unmatched in bravura.

"Berenice Holmes was really remarkable," Kelly recalled, "Because she had been with Bolm. she knew how a man could dance. She could do double tours en l'air better than a man.

Ballet was not the first type of dance that Kelly, his two sisters and two brothers learned when their mother sent them to "a very polite dancing academy" in Pittsburgh in the early 1920s, when they were children. "As second-generation Irish, we should improve ourselves, she thought," Kelly said. The idea was so good that before he graduated from the University of Pittsburgh in 1933 he had opened the Gene Kelly School of Dance and started a second branch in Johnstown, Pennsylvania. One of Kelly's sisters taught beginning ballet, while his younger brother, Fred, per-formed with him in nightclubs and local shows.

When Alton, who saw Kelly's stagings in Pittsburgh, encouraged him to go to New York in 1937, Kelly already saw himself as a choreographer rather than as a dancer. Certainly his experiments with film technology, including animated-cartoon figures as partners, gave viewers a cre-ative view of dance on film. Yet as a choreographer he was remarkably attuned to the dominant dance aesthetics of his day.

When he recruited ballet dancers for "Invitation to the Dance," his first choices for male stars were Igor Youskevitch of the Baliets Russes de Monte Carlo and Ballet Theater and Jean Babilé from Roland Petit's company in France. "They were gymnasts, that's how we all started," he said.

The French ballerina Janine Charrat led him to Claire Sombert, a young unknown at the Paris Opéra Ballet, and Kelly enlisted the ballerina Tamara Toumanova and a leading Balanchine ballerina. Diana Adams. The novelty of an all-dance film was so strong in 1956 that Life magazine referred to the movie at its release as "a nontalkie entirely done in dance."

The film died, but Kelly went on to accept the Paris Opera Ballet's invitation in 1960 to choreograph "Pas de Dieux." Claude Bessy, the rising French ballet star he had used in "Invitation to the Dance," portrayed "Zeus's lady who is bored and comes down to the south of France for a fling." It was good clean naughty fun and Kelly could use all the flying machines for clouds and chariots that a 19th-century opera house can provide. By his own account, "the ensemble choreography was weak but the individual parts in the pas de deux were well done. Now I feel I could do it
